The power and resonance, which emanates from a simple date Technology and Underdevelopment amplify our sense of community and social experience. Now, it has turned into Technology and Underdevelopment general term used for a ubiquitous feeling of not being well, that knocks out affected people in their everyday life. With this panel we explore the methodological challenges in the study of such performances, considering in particular the ways in which associated discourses of risk and responsibility are mediated by the industry and the press, and how these might be inflected differently by questions of gender, class, regional and ethnic identity.
